NOTES ON THE PROGRAM: MAHLER SYMPHONY NO. 9

Throughout his career Gustav Mahler balanced the competing demands of his dual vocation as a composer and conductor. Responsibilities on the podium and in the administrative office completely occupied him during the concert season, thereby forcing him to relegate his composing to the summer months, which he would spend as a near-hermit at some idyllic spot in the countryside. Mahler wrote his Ninth Symphony mostly during the summer of 1909 at Alt-Schluderbach near Toblach, an Italian community in South Tyrol, on the border with Austria in the Dolomite Alps. He had constructed a studio for composition, set at the edge of a spruce forest, not far from the home he and his wife, Alma, rented; a fence topped with barbed wire ensured that no one could interrupt him while he worked, which he did beginning at 6:00 a.m. every morning. Gustav and Alma had already spent the summer of 1908 at this retreat, where he recharged himself after an extended visit to conduct various works at The Metropolitan Opera in New York. He was back in New York for the 1908 season, conducting the New York Symphony as well as at The Met, and near the end of the season he also led the New York Philharmonic, which he had agreed to take over as music director beginning in the fall of 1909. The composition of the Ninth Symphony therefore coincided with the beginning of his New York Philharmonic years, which would be regrettably brief, ending after only two seasons with his death in May 1911.

NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC PREMIERE
December 20, 1945, Bruno Walter, conductor
On April 1, 1910, Mahler wrote to his amanuensis, the conductor Bruno Walter, to report that he had completed his Ninth Symphony. “In it,” he declared, “something is said that I have had on the tip of my tongue for some time; perhaps (as a whole) it comes closest to the 4th. (But it is completely different.)” Indeed, this heartrending revelation of Mahler’s soul is “completely different” from the often dreamlike expanses of his fairy-tale Fourth (which preceded the Ninth by a decade). Nevertheless, the two do have something in common: they share the sense of conveying thoughts about the transience of life — perhaps somewhat fancifully in the Fourth, certainly with unrestrained emotion and sentiment in the Ninth.

Mahler was pushing himself to his limit through his hyper-filled calendar of conducting commitments, not to mention the physical and intellectual drain of his composing, and he was doing so against doctors’ orders. The year 1907 had been a cruel one for Mahler: in addition to his break from the musical life of Vienna, where he had been based for years, he lost his eldest daughter to scarlet fever; then, that summer, he had learned that he was suffering from heart disease (a valvular defect) that, while not likely to prove immediately fatal, was potentially dangerous and could well shorten his life. An outdoor enthusiast, he was forced to curtail his physical activities drastically.

THE NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC CONNECTION
To provide a new vision and financial stability for the New York Philharmonic, in 1908 a group of wealthy New Yorkers (led by two women, Mary Seney Sheldon and Minnie Untermyer) formed the Guarantors Committee, which was responsible for engaging Gustav Mahler as the Orchestra’s Principal Conductor (a position now referred to as Music Director). When he assumed this post in the fall of 1909, the eminent composer and conductor undertook his first and only experience as a director of a symphonic orchestra, freeing him to delve more deeply into the symphonic literature. During his brief tenure the Orchestra’s season expanded (from 18 concerts to 54), musicians’ salaries were guaranteed, and the scope of operations broadened — thus giving birth to the 20th-century orchestra.

On February 21, 1911, Mahler led an Italian-themed program that included Mendelssohn’s Italian Symphony and the premiere of Busoni’s Berceuse élégiaque. Although he was suffering from throat trouble and a severe headache, he managed to conduct the entire concert, but he had to withdraw from the program’s second performance, scheduled for February 24.

He never conducted again. Physicians soon diagnosed bacterial endocarditis, a heart ailment that in the pre-antibiotic era was fatal. On April 8 Mahler sailed for France for a medical consultation; he then traveled to Vienna, where he died on May 18.

—THE EDITORS
Against such a background, the composition of a ninth symphony held other troubling prospects as well. Beethoven, Schubert, and Dvořák had all brought their symphonic cycles to completion with their Ninth Symphonies, and Bruckner had died before quite finishing his. To Mahler, who had begun to cultivate a superstitious streak, the very idea of a ninth symphony therefore summoned up thoughts of mortality. On the other hand, pretty much everything summoned up thoughts of mortality for Mahler, but at this point he was not ready to give in to fate. When he completed his Ninth Symphony he was still three months short of his 50th birthday, and upon finishing it he promptly plunged into the composition of yet another symphony.

Sadly, Mahler’s Tenth would remain an incomplete torso, leaving his Ninth to stand as a poignant swan song. That the composer viewed this work as a sort of leave-taking seems beyond debate: its principal theme is derived from Beethoven’s Farewell (Les Adieux) Piano Sonata, and the symphony — particularly its opening and concluding movements, both of which are slow — is filled with intimations of yearning, nostalgia, regret, despair, isolation, resignation, and even personal solace.

—James M. Keller Program Annotator

THE END OF AN ERA

Mahler’s Ninth Symphony not only brings to a conclusion his completed orchestral oeuvre, but it also represents a final achievement in the mainstream symphonic tradition that had been developing for more than a century and a half. Bruno Walter wrote of “the prophetic significance” of the work:

Here Mahler stands once more upon the mysterious threshold beyond which lies a new unexplored province of the realm of music. Mahler’s “quotation” themes appear as ghostly symbols, reduced to bare outlines; the texture is thinned out, much as in some passages of the latest Beethoven; the independent melodic lines are projected bluntly against a vast empty horizon and clash with each other in harsh, portentous friction. This is not only Mahler’s last symphony: the symphonic form as such is torn apart after having been tried to the limit.

INSTRUMENTATION

Four flutes and piccolo, four oboes (one doubling English horn), three clarinets and one E-flat clarinet and one bass clarinet, four bassoons (one doubling contrabassoon), four horns, three trumpets, three trombones, tuba, timpani (two pairs), cymbals, snare drum, bass drum, tam-tam, triangle, orchestra bells, low-pitched chimes, two harps, and strings. Mahler’s autograph uses a single harp, but Bruno Walter divided the part between two instruments, an arrangement that is used in this performance.

ABOUT THE ARTIST

LORIN MAazel, who has led more than 150 orchestras in more than 5,000 opera and concert performances, became Music Director of the New York Philharmonic in September 2002. His appointment came 60 years after his debut with the Orchestra at Lewisohn Stadium, then the Orchestra's summer venue. As Music Director he has conducted nine World Premiere–New York Philharmonic Commissions, including the Pulitzer Prize– and Grammy Award–winning On the Transmigration of Souls by John Adams; Stephen Hartke’s Symphony No. 3; Melinda Wagner’s Trombone Concerto; and Steven Stucky’s Rhapsodies for Orchestra. He has led cycles of works by Brahms, Beethoven, and Tchaikovsky; and he conducted the Orchestra’s inaugural performances in the DG Concerts series — a groundbreaking initiative to offer downloadable New York Philharmonic concerts exclusively on iTunes.

Mr. Maazel has taken the Orchestra on numerous international tours, including the historic visit to Pyongyang, Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, in February 2008 — the first performance there by an American orchestra. Other recent tours have included Europe 2008 in August–September; Asia 2008 — to Taipei, Kaohsiung, Hong Kong, Shanghai, and Beijing in February; the May 2007 Tour of Europe; the November 2006 visit to Japan and Korea; the Philharmonic Tour of Italy in June 2006, sponsored by Generali; the two-part 75th Anniversary European Tour to thirteen cities in five countries in the fall of 2005; and residencies in Cagliari, Sardinia, and at the Bravo! Vail Valley Music Festival in Colorado.

In addition to the New York Philharmonic, Mr. Maazel is music director of the Palau de les Arts Reina Sofia in Valencia, Spain. A frequent conductor on the world’s operatic stages, he returned to The Metropolitan Opera in January 2008 for the first time in 45 years to conduct Wagner’s Die Walküre.

Prior to his tenure as New York Philharmonic Music Director, Mr. Maazel led more than 100 performances of the Orchestra as a guest conductor. He served as music director of the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra (1993–2002), and has held positions as music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra (1993–2002), and has served as music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra (1988–96); general manager and chief conductor of the Vienna Staatsoper (1982–84); music director of The Cleveland Orchestra (1972–82); and artistic director and chief conductor of the Deutsche Oper Berlin (1965–71). He is an honorary member of the Israel and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestras, and a Commander of the Legion of Honor of France.

A second-generation American, born in Paris, Mr. Maazel was raised and educated in the United States. He took his first violin lesson at age five, and first conducting lesson at seven. Between ages 9 and 15 he conducted most of the major American orchestras. In 1953 he made his European conducting debut in Catania, Italy.

Mr. Maazel is also an accomplished composer. His opera, 1984, received its world premiere on May 3, 2005, at London’s Royal Opera House, Covent Garden. It was revived in the 2007–08 season at the Teatro alla Scala in Milan, and has been released on DVD by Decca.
The New York Philharmonic, founded in 1842 by a group of local musicians led by American-born Ureli Corelli Hill, is by far the oldest symphony orchestra in the United States, and one of the oldest in the world. It currently plays some 180 concerts a year, and on December 18, 2004, gave its 14,000th concert — a milestone unmatched by any other symphony orchestra in the world.

Lorin Maazel began his tenure as Music Director in September 2002, the latest in a distinguished line of 20th-century musical giants that has included Kurt Masur (Music Director from 1991 to the summer of 2002; named Music Director Emeritus in 2002); Zubin Mehta (1978–91); Pierre Boulez (1971–77); and Leonard Bernstein, who was appointed Music Director in 1958 and given the lifetime title of Laureate Conductor in 1969. In September 2009 Alan Gilbert will become the Orchestra’s next Music Director.

Since its inception the Orchestra has championed the new music of its time, commissioning or premiering many important works such as Dvořák’s Symphony No. 9, From the New World; Rachmaninoff’s Piano Concerto No. 3; Gershwin’s Piano Concerto in F; and Copland’s Connotations. The Philharmonic has also given the U.S. premieres of works such as Beethoven’s Symphonies Nos. 8 and 9 and Brahms’s Symphony No. 4. This pioneering tradition has continued to the present day, with works of major contemporary composers regularly scheduled each season, including John Adams’s Pulitzer Prize– and Grammy Award winning On the Transmigration of Souls; Stephen Hartke’s Symphony No. 3; Augusta Read Thomas’s Gathering Paradise, Emily Dickinson Settings for Soprano and Orchestra; and Esa-Pekka Salonen’s Piano Concerto.

The roster of composers and conductors who have led the Philharmonic includes such historic figures as Theodore Thomas, Antonín Dvořák, Gustav Mahler (Music Director, 1909–11), Otto Klemperer, Richard Strauss, Willem Mengelberg (Music Director, 1922–30), Wilhelm Furtwängler, Arturo Toscanini (Music Director, 1928–36), Igor Stravinsky, Aaron Copland, Bruno Walter (Music Advisor, 1947–49), Dimitri Mitropoulos (Music Director, 1949–58), Klaus Tennstedt, George Szell (Music Advisor, 1969–70), and Erich Leinsdorf.

Long a leader in American musical life, the Philharmonic has over the last century become renowned around the globe, appearing in 425 cities in 59 countries on five continents. In February 2008 the Orchestra, led by Music Director Lorin Maazel, gave a historic performance in Pyongyang, Democratic People’s Republic of Korea — the first visit there by an American orchestra, and an event watched around the world and for which the Philharmonic received the 2008 Common Ground Award for Cultural Diplomacy. Other historic tours have included the 1930 Tour to Europe, with Toscanini; the first Tour to the USSR, in 1959; the 1998 Asia Tour, the first performances in mainland China; and the 75th Anniversary European Tour, in 2005, with Lorin Maazel.

A longtime media pioneer, the Philharmonic began radio broadcasts in 1922 and is currently represented by The New York Philharmonic This Week — syndicated nationally 52 weeks per year, and available on nyyphil.org and Sirius XM Radio. On television, in the 1950s and 1960s, the Philharmonic inspired a generation through Bernstein’s Young People’s Concerts on CBS. Its television presence has continued with annual appearances on Live From Lincoln Center on PBS, and in 2003 it made history as the first Orchestra ever to perform live on the Grammy Awards, one of the most-watched television events worldwide. The Philharmonic became the first major American orchestra to offer downloadable concerts, recorded live, and released by DG Concerts exclusively on iTunes. Since 1917 the Philharmonic has made nearly 2,000 recordings, with more than 500 currently available. On June 4, 2007, the New York Philharmonic proudly announced a new partnership with Credit Suisse, its first-ever and exclusive Global Sponsor.
