and was made man.
He was crucified also for us under Pontius Pilate,
suffered, and was buried,
and on the third day he rose again,
according to the Scriptures,
and ascended into heaven
and sits at the right hand of the Father,
and he shall come again with glory,
to judge the living and the dead;
of his kingdom there will be no end.
And I believe in the Holy Spirit,
the Lord and Giver of life,
who proceeds from the Father and the Son.
Who with the Father and the Son
together is adored and glorified, who spoke through the Prophets.
And I believe in one holy, catholic and apostolic Church.
I confess one baptism for the remission of sins.
And I expect the resurrection of the dead,
and the life of the world to come. Amen.

Holy, Holy, Holy,
Lord God of Hosts.
Heaven and earth are full of your glory.
Hosanna in the highest.

Lamb of God,
who takes away the sins of the world,

Lamb of God,
who takes away the sins of the world,
have mercy upon us.

Lamb of God,
who takes away the sins of the world,
grant us peace.
he three-score years and ten between the composition of Bach's B-minor Mass and Beethoven's Missa solemnis (1819–1823) witnessed wrenching changes in European society. In 1776, England's American colonies declared independence from their distant ruler, and just thirteen years later the French peasantry relieved Louis XVI of his head, axing with the same blow the divine right of kings. And as Enlightenment philosophy spread and political power seeped downward, the church, the oldest bastion of conservatism, struggled to maintain its influence. Europe became more secular, rational, and individualistic.

The personal words the two composers inscribed on their Masses reflect this evolution. On the final page of the B-Minor Mass, a vast work that served as Bach's final artistic testament, he wrote humbly and objectively, "To God alone be the glory." Beethoven, however, superscribed his Missa solemnis with the intimately personal "From the heart—may it go to the heart."

The contrasting circumstances of the two composers' employment are also illustrative. In Bach's time a composer could make a living in his profession only if employed by a noble, city, or church. Beethoven, on the other hand, was among the first entrepreneur-composers to sell his works to the public. Granted, wealthy patrons and friends frequently pulled him out of financial ditches, but he nonetheless blazed a trail for those who followed.

The Missa solemnis (Solemn Mass) is the second of his two Masses, the first having been the comparatively conservative and smaller-scale C-major Mass of 1807. Both are written in five movements corresponding to the five sections of the Roman Catholic Mass Ordinary. Beethoven initially conceived his Missa solemnis as the installation music for his most distinguished pupil, the Archduke Rudolph, brother to the emperor, who was to be made Cardinal of Olmütz, Austria on March 9, 1820. Beethoven began composing eighteen months in advance, but due to a host of personal troubles and his compulsive and time-consuming revisions, he missed his deadline. It was not until three years later that the Cardinal finally received his presentation copy of the score. Still, the compositional process seems to have been marked by exaltation. Of the year 1819, Beethoven's secretary Anton Schindler wrote, "when I recall his spiritual tension, I must admit that never before and never since have I experienced him in such sublime and unearthly spheres."

Beethoven wanted to attempt this work only when he possessed the compositional tools that would connect it to the centuries-old history of the Mass and ensure it an honored place in that continuum. So it was that the master composer of his day, nearing the end of his life, undertook a study of Gregorian chant and the church music of his predecessors, including Palestrina (c. 1525–1594) and Bach. His work with both sharpened his contrapuntal skills, Palestrina.
enriching his imitative writing, and Bach providing lessons in the all-but-obsolete art of the fugue. To the former we owe many delicate passages such as the Christe eleison, and to the latter the fugues of the Gloria, Credo, and Agnus Dei.

The Missa solemnis is, nonetheless, anything but a traditional Mass. First, it is too long and dramatic to be used in an actual church service, where liturgy would require the movements to be performed separately. Indeed, it could not even be heard in the Vienna concert halls of Beethoven's time, as Masses were banned from those venues: The premiere of three of its movements in Vienna on May 7, 1824 had to be advertised as "Three Great Hymns" to keep the censors at bay. Second, it defied earlier stylistic conventions in favor of a structure more akin to the symphony than to previous Mass compositions.

A traditional Missa solemnis generally had clear-cut sections for soloists and chorus, respectively, and the words served as the source of both the musical structure and materials. Specific words such as "glory," "peace," "mercy," or "arose" were usually depicted in sound. Though Beethoven obviously delighted in such word painting, he was more concerned about larger-scale ideas and events. In the Credo, for example, he chose not to divide the lengthy text into several discrete movements of contrasting characters as had Bach (nine movements) and others. Instead, the music is continuous, with fiery and stately passages alternating with sections of chamber-music-like intimacy.

The Credo exemplifies Beethoven's treatment of his libretto. In introduction to his interpretation of the incarnation (Et incarnatus est), the Holy Spirit descends almost boisterously to earth, whereupon the world stills. The tempo slows, texture thins, the music becomes gentle and sustained, as the tenor announces the great mystery: "And became incarnate by the Holy Spirit of the Virgin Mary: and was made man." Beethoven "sanctifies" the passage by writing in the medieval Dorian mode rather than in a modern key, and gives the flute a symphonic-style solo in which its unusual fluttering in the stratosphere suggests the presence of the Holy Spirit—a musical synonym for the radiant dove that crowns the altarpieces of old Bavarian and Austrian churches. (The Benedictus offers another remarkable symphonic interpretation of the Holy Spirit, this for solo violin.)

The romantic in Beethoven is especially immediate after the first presentation by the choir of the words passus et sepultus est (suffered and was buried), where the soloists continue on the same text, as if even the grave fails to quell the Saviour's suffering.

The design of the entire movement aims toward a climactic, 167-measure fugue on the words Et vitam venturi saeculi, amen (and life everlasting, amen), and Beethoven nearly casts aside swathes of text in his eagerness to get there. The words et resurrexit (and arose) through non erit finis (shall have no end)—to which Bach assigned an entire movement in his Mass—are gone in a couple of minutes. Then Beethoven dispenses with forty-four words in just forty-two measures. (Bach devoted forty-five measures to just the words Credo in unum Deum.) The pervasive repetition here of the four-note Credo motto (I believe) that began the movement provides him with musical means to move so rapidly: The chorus briskly chants whole passages while one part at a time pierces the texture, declaring, "I believe, I believe!"

The Et vitam venturi (And [I believe in] life everlasting) begins as a relaxed double fugue that slowly comes to a boil and then explodes in diminution (a doubling of tempo). The aftermath, an exquisite, lyric coda, is rivaled in effect only by the conclusion of the Agnus Dei at the end of the Mass.

Like the Ninth Symphony, which shared the program with the Missa solemnis at its Vienna premiere (Beethoven routinely subjected his audiences to numbingly long concerts), the Missa solemnis has always had a well-deserved reputation for the difficulty of its vocal parts. It is legendary, but true, that the choruses for early performances of the symphony rebelled at their unremittingly high and loud parts. One can only imagine how the chorus in 1824 reacted to the accelerated portion of the Et vitam venturi fugue, a passage that even today is considered among the most challenging in choral literature.

Beethoven himself considered the Missa solemnis to be his finest composition, or so he said, perhaps self-servingly, in an advertisement for the sale of manuscript copies. He had reason to think so. Coming in his final years, it summarizes his life's work just as the B-minor Mass memorializes Bach's achievements. His eminence Rudolph Johann Joseph Rainier, Archduke of Austria, Cardinal and Archbishop of Olmütz, may be long forgotten, but the Mass Beethoven wrote in his honor will endure.

* Pacific Chorale Artists’ Council
Pacific Symphony, currently in its 38th season, celebrates a decade of creative music-making as the resident orchestra of the Renée and Henry Segerstrom Concert Hall. Led by Music Director Carl St.Clair for the past 27 years, the Symphony is the largest orchestra formed in the U.S. in the last 50 years and is recognized as an outstanding ensemble making strides on both the national and international scene, as well as in its own community of Orange County. Presenting more than 100 concerts and events a year and a rich array of education and community engagement programs, the Symphony reaches more than 300,000 residents—from school children to senior citizens.

The Symphony offers repertoire ranging from the great orchestral masterworks to music from today’s most prominent composers, highlighted by the annual American Composers Festival. Five seasons ago, the Symphony launched the highly successful opera initiative, “Symphonic Voices,” which continues in February 2017 with Verdi’s Aida. It also offers a popular Pops season, enhanced by state-of-the-art video and sound, led by Principal Pops Conductor Richard Kaufman, who celebrated 25 years with the orchestra in 2015-16. Each Symphony season also includes Café Ludwig, a chamber music series; an educational Family Musical Mornings series; and Sunday Casual Connections, an orchestral matinee series offering rich explorations of selected works led by St.Clair.

Founded in 1978 as a collaboration between California State University, Fullerton (CSUF), and North Orange County community leaders led by Marcy Mulville, the Symphony performed its first concerts at Fullerton’s Plummer Auditorium as the Pacific Chamber Orchestra, under the baton of then-CSUF orchestra conductor Keith Clark. Two seasons later, the Symphony expanded its size and changed its name to Pacific Symphony Orchestra. Then in 1981-82, the orchestra moved to Knott’s Berry Farm for one year. The subsequent four seasons, led by Clark, took place at Santa Ana High School auditorium where the Symphony also made its first six acclaimed recordings. In September 1986, the Symphony moved to the new Orange County Performing Arts Center, where Clark served as music director until 1990, and from 1987-2016, the orchestra has additionally presented a Summer Festival at Irvine Meadows Amphitheatre. Ten years ago, the Symphony moved into the Renée and Henry Segerstrom Concert Hall, with striking architecture by Cesar Pelli and acoustics by Russell Johnson—and in 2008, inaugurated the hall’s critically acclaimed 4,322-pipe William J. Gillespie Concert Organ. The orchestra embarked on its first European tour in 2006, performing in nine cities in three countries.

The 2016-17 season continues St.Clair’s commitment to new music with commissions by pianist/composer Conrad Tao and composer-in-residence Narong Prangcharoen. Recordings commissioned and performed by the Symphony include the release of William Bolcom’s Songs of Lorca and Prometheus in 2015-16, Richard Danielpour’s Toward a Season of Peace and Philip Glass’ The Passion of Ramakrishna in 2013-14; and Michael Daugherty’s Mount Rushmore and The Gospel According to Sister Aimee in 2012-13. In 2014-15, Elliot Goldenthal released a recording of his Symphony in G-sharp Minor, written for and performed by the Symphony. The Symphony has also commissioned and recorded An American Requiem by Danielpour and Fire Water Paper: A Vietnam Oratorio by Goldenthal featuring Yo-Yo Ma. Other recordings have included collaborations with such composers as Lukas Foss and Toru Takemitsu. Other leading composers commissioned by the Symphony include Paul Chihara, Daniel Catán, James Newton Howard, William Kraft, Ana Lara, Tobias Picker, Christopher Theofanidis, Frank Ticheli and Chen Yi.

In both 2005 and 2010, the Symphony received the prestigious ASCAP Award for Adventurous Programming. Also in 2010, a study by the League of American Orchestras, “Fearless Journeys,” included the Symphony as one of the country’s five most innovative orchestras. The Symphony’s award-winning education programs benefit from the vision of St.Clair and are designed to integrate the orchestra and its music into the community in ways that stimulate all ages. The Symphony’s Class Act program has been honored as one of nine exemplary orchestra education programs by the National Endowment for the Arts and the League of American Orchestras.

The Symphony’s award-winning education and community engagement programs benefit from the vision of St.Clair and are designed to integrate the orchestra and its music into the community in ways that stimulate all ages. The list of instrumental training initiatives includes Pacific Symphony Youth Orchestra, Pacific Symphony Youth Wind Ensemble and Pacific Symphony Santiago Strings. The Symphony also spreads the joy of music through its many programs including arts-X-press, Class Act, Heartstrings, OC Can You Play With Us?, Santa Ana Strings, Strings for Generations and Symphony in the Cities.
